Promoting public health research, policy, practice, and education is the mission of the American Journal of Public Health. As we widen our scope to embrace global issues, we also sharpen our focus to support the needs of public health practitioners. We invite contributions of original unpublished research, opinion and commentary, departments, and letters to the editor.

The Journal is printed on acid-free recycled paper.

Cover. In school districts across the United States, public health workers, parents, teachers, and school officials are collaborating on initiatives to combat the rapid rise in child obesity associated with declining levels of physical activity, poor diets, proliferation of fast foods and sodas, and increased television viewing. In this issue, Wojcicki and Heyman describe how the San Francisco United School District has changed its school lunch program by setting general nutrition standards for individual food items, reducing portion sizes, and eliminating soda sales at elementary and middle schools. Across the country, in Washington, DC, the annual National Physical Fitness and Sports Month opens with sports events on the National Mall for school-aged youths. The cover image shows 11-year-old Andrea Watkins, from the Washington Middle School for Girls, working out on free exercise equipment at the opening events on May 3, 2005.
